Did you know that you can find vending machines at the top of Mt. Fuji? ③It is () () mountain () Japan and is a World Heritage Site. Every year, when the mountain climbing season starts, vending machines are ④(carry) to the top by a bulldozer, and are ④(carry) back when the season ends. ⑤[can / the machines / buy / you / from / the drinks] are very expensive, but mountain climbers still find them helpful.

Japanese vending machines have the most advanced technology in the world. ⑥() () this, we can buy almost anything such as hot noodles, frozen fish and fresh vegetables. The technology draws attention from around the world and many countries have started to import Japanese vending machines. Seventy percent of the vending machines in China are from Japanese companies. It seems that more and more countries will use Japanese technology in the future.

Because of the advanced technology of the vending machines, some of them play an important role in case of natural disasters. For example, some vending machines have a free Wi-Fi system. When a natural disaster happens, they work as a Wi-Fi station. People can use the internet for free near the machine. Other machines offer some drinks for free for people in need. Japan has had many natural disasters. So, vending machines also work ⑦to help people's lives.

Vending machines are indispensable to Japanese society. They are machines selling drinks and other products. They also help people in trouble. ⑧These machines make people's lives comfortable, safe and happy.

(A) 次の会話文はブレイキン(breaking)についてです。読んで問いに答えなさい。

Alex : Hey Jamie. Have you heard about breaking? It's a cool dance sport.

Jamie : Yes, I have. But I don't know much about it. ①

Alex : Breaking started in the 1970s. It was created by young people in the Bronx, New York City. They wanted to express themselves through dance.

Jamie : That sounds interesting. ②[many / there / moves / are / how] in breaking?

Alex : There are several kinds of moves. Some of them are called "toprock," "footwork," "power moves," and "freezes." Toprock is a standing dance, while footwork is a dance done on the floor.

Jamie : I see. What are power moves?

Alex : Power moves are the really impressive spins and flips. Dancers need a lot of strength and practice. They often show their skills with these moves.

Jamie : It seems difficult. Are there any other features in breaking?

Alex : Yes. Dancers perform with music, but they can't choose the music themselves.

Jamie : ③

Alex : The DJ will. The dancers must dance to the music without any preparation.

Jamie : Wow. That sounds tough.

Alex : Dancers show their best moves, and judges score them on creativity, style, and technique.

Jamie : That sounds exciting. Are there any famous breaking competitions?

Alex : Definitely. One of the biggest competitions is called "Red Bull BC One." The best dancers from all over the world join the competition.

Jamie : How many people usually join the competition?

Alex : Each year, thousands of dancers join. Only thirty-two dancers can get to the final.

Jamie : That's amazing. Breaking also became an official sport for the first time at last year's Paris Olympics, ④

Alex : Yes, it did. It was wonderful news for break dancers around the world.

Jamie : ⑤Breaking is [an art form / also / not / a dance / but / only].

Alex : That's right. It brings people together and lets them express themselves. Breaking is really special.

Jamie : Thanks for sharing, Alex. I want ⑥ now.

Alex : You're welcome, Jamie. Let's try some moves together sometime!

- 4 次はアンガーマネジメント(anger management)についての英文です。
読んで、問いに答えなさい。

Anger management is controlling and expressing anger in a healthy way. Anger is a normal emotion, but when it's not managed well, it can lead to arguments, fights, and even health problems. So, learning how to manage anger is important for everyone.

First, it's helpful to understand "triggers." These are what make us angry and they can be different for everyone. We may get angry when we feel stressed, or when we feel that we are not treated fairly. By knowing what our triggers are, we can start to understand why we feel angry in those situations. This understanding is the first step in controlling anger.

Next, it's important to recognize the signs of anger. Anger doesn't happen suddenly. We may feel our heart beating faster, or our face getting hot. We may also start to feel frustrated. Recognizing these signs early can help us to calm down.

There are many things you can do to calm down. It's worth learning how to do so. Some people find that taking deep breaths helps them relax. Others feel better after going for a walk or doing some exercise. It can also be helpful to take a break from the situation that has made us angry. This gives us time to calm down.

One important part of anger management is knowing how to express frustration in a healthy way. We can talk about how we feel without hurting others or ourselves. For example, instead of shouting at someone, we can say, "I'm feeling really upset because..." This helps the other person understand how we feel without feeling attacked.

Sometimes, our thoughts can make our anger worse. We may think things like, "This is the worst thing ever!" or "I can't stand this!" If we can change these thoughts to be more positive, we can feel calmer. For example, instead of thinking, "This is terrible," we can think, "This is difficult, but I can do it." A simple change can make a big difference.

It may be helpful to talk to a therapist or join an anger management class. Specialists can teach us more about why we feel angry and show us how to manage our anger better. They can also help us practice new skills in a safe environment.

Anger is a powerful emotion, but with the right skills, we can control it. By learning anger management skills, we can build better relationships, feel happier, and live more peaceful lives.

(注) normal 正常な emotion 感情 manage~ ~にうまく対処する argument 口論 treat~ ~を扱う situation 状況 sign 兆候 frustrated いらいらした calm down 落ち着く upset 動揺している breath 呼吸 stand~ ~に耐える therapist セラピスト

- 問 1 次の(a)～(h)が，本文の内容に合っていれば○を，合っていなければ×を答えなさい。
- (a) アンガーマネジメントを学ぶことは，誰にとっても重要である。
 - (b) どんな状況で怒りを感じるかは人それぞれである。
 - (c) 怒りの兆候には，感情的な変化だけでなく，身体的な反応も含まれる。
 - (d) 深呼吸や運動は，怒りを和らげるための効果的な方法である。
 - (e) 怒りをそのまま表現する方が，相手に気持ちが伝わる。
 - (f) ネガティブな思考は，怒りをコントロールするために役立つ。
 - (g) 怒りを感じるたびに，必ず専門家の助けが必要だ。
 - (h) 怒りをコントロールすることで，より良い人間関係を築くことができる。

問 2 本文の内容に合うように，(1)～(4)に入る適当な語を下のア～クから選び，記号で答えなさい。ただし，選択肢には使用しない語も含まれます。また，同じ選択肢を 2 度使ってはいけません。

Anger management is about learning how to control and express anger in a healthy way. Understanding what makes us angry and recognizing the (1) signs help us calm down. It is important to express anger calmly and positively (2) hurting others. Simple things like deep breathing, taking breaks, and changing our thoughts can help. If anger is (3) to manage, talking to a therapist can be helpful. Learning anger management skills (4) better relationships and a happier life.
